Annual Meetings in Brazil .................. 3
New Professional Staff .................... 5
1967 United Givers Fund Campaign ........ 11
An official introduction to Brazil* includes the statement that in Rio de Janeiro "you meet the past, the present and the future at the same time."

The city, which is host to the Bank Group and Fund Annual Meetings this month, is also one of the great cosmopolitan centers of the world, in whose atmosphere a sense of history blends easily with an awareness of the shape of things to come. It is a meeting place for old and new traditions, of breathtaking natural beauty and striking architecture, and has a world-wide reputation for sophisticated charm.

The city lies in a series of crescents between mountain forests and the tropical Atlantic, its beaches are internationally famous and the Brazilians are justifiably proud of its jewel-like setting and modern appearance. The writer quoted above was referring mainly to its architecture, and especially to the contrast between narrow colonial streets, with their classical structures, and the ultra-modern buildings for which contemporary Brazil is renowned.

The words could also be appropriate to the sense of history which inspired the choice of Rio for the Annual Meetings, and for the Brazilians' "sense of occasion" that will help to make it memorable.

Brazil was one of the founder members of the Bank and Fund at Bretton Woods and its Government has gone to considerable pains to host this year's Meetings. One of its newest buildings, created from the outset with a view to becoming one of Rio's landmarks, is the Museum of Modern Art which will be the site of the 1967 Meetings.

For nearly two years now, some of Brazil's principal politicians, businessmen, government officials and bankers have been working to ensure a fitting welcome to the finance ministers and economic planners from every corner of the world, converging on the city this month in their roles of Bank and Fund Governors. Reservations have been made in nearly twenty hotels, a fleet of nearly 200 automobiles and drivers, many of them multi-lingual, have been scheduled to serve the delegations and staff, special bus services arranged and a multitude of details settled, ranging from simultaneous interpretation equipment to special luggage tags for travelers at Rio's international airport.

Hotel owners and students, chauffeurs and stenographers, airline officials and a host of other local helpers have been mobilized in preparation for the influx. As in all cases when Annual Meetings are held outside Washington, the advance guard of behind-the-scenes experts from headquarters have become familiar figures, and even phlegmatic locals have caught a hint of September's nervous tensions (an inescapable part of pre-Annual Meetings atmosphere) as the date of the opening session approaches.

Rio is the eighth city outside Washington to host the Annual Meetings since the Bank opened for business in 1946. The others, mostly at three-yearly intervals since then, were London, Paris, Mexico City, Istanbul, New Delhi, Vienna and Tokyo.

The Governors, themselves, bring their own sense of past achievements and future needs to the Meetings, traditionally one of the most important stocktaking and forwardlooking reviews of the world's fiscal and developmental policies to be held each year.

As in all Annual Meetings, the five days in Rio will be devoted to discussions of the activities of the organizations, informal exchanges of views and to formal business. It will be a time for renewing contacts both inside and outside the meeting halls for conferences in hotel suites taken over as national delegation offices, and for the cultivation of old and new friendships in the many social gatherings associated with the occasion.

An estimated 2,000 to 2,200 people are expected to visit Brazil for the Meetings, including Governors and Alternates, their Advisers, Observers, Special Guests and Staff, a figure which is somewhat exceeded when the meetings are in Washington. Their number includes also the Executive Directors, bankers, industrialists, economists, educationalists and others from many walks of life, whose interests reflect the widening areas of the Bank's concern for economic development.

The Governors are expected to make something like seventy speeches, totalling over 100,000 words, in joint and separate sessions. Their words will be carried on wire services, in newspapers and on television and radio reports, under the by-lines of financial correspondents whose names are already familiar to most Bank staff from the pages of the international press. And once again the tempo of the proceedings will appear disarmingly effortless—to all, that is, except those working in the wings in an unremitting effort to keep the huge gathering on its streamlined course. However, they have an appreciative audience among their fellow international civil servants, many of whom are regular observers of these Annual Meetings.

This year the Meetings will have separate Chairmen for the Boards of Governors of the Bank Group and the Fund. This is not unique. There have been separate Chairmen in six previous years, when they were drawn respectively from France, Brazil, Netherlands, Egypt, Belgium and Italy. The practice has the advantage of bringing two distinguished Norwegians to the Chair in Brazil.

The Rt. Hon. Kåre Willoch, the Chairman of the Bank's Board, has been Minister of Commerce in the Norwegian Government since October 1965, following a distinguished political career which first carried him into the Storting (Norwegian Parliament) in 1957, and into the Government in 1963. He has been the Norwegian Conservative Party's leading spokesman on economic and financial affairs, and, in addition to his position as Governor of the Bank/IFC/IDA, he is Norway's Governor for the Asian Development Bank. He has also served as a member of Norway's delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations, and as Chairman of the Council of the European Free Trade Association.

The Rt. Hon. Erik Brofoss, the Chairman of the Fund's Board, has been the Governor of the Bank of Norway since 1954, following nearly ten years' service in the Norwegian Government, where he was successively Minister of Finance and Minister of Commerce and Shipping.

For both Chairmen as well as for their fellow Governors, the Bank staff and others participating, the Annual Meetings in Rio should be remembered long after their departure from Brazil.

Overheard:

After a hot and humid afternoon of wading through the swamps and streams, I came upon the village of Ale. Ale is a small village on one of the innumerable creeks that meander aimlessly towards the sea along the Nigeria-Dahomey border, far from the nearest road. The people of Ale earn a simple livelihood by fishing and farming, and the appearance of strangers in the village, particularly white men, still brings a general suspension of work. As we entered, my colleague, Butler, and I were immediately inundated in a sea of inquiring black faces and swept into the hut of the aged village chief. We asked if anyone spoke English and a timid-looking youth was pushed forward. In simplest language we explained our mission, which was to evaluate the economic benefits of building a new road past the village, while he interpreted directly to the chief. Butler, who prides himself on his ability to communicate at this basic level, put a question: ‘You carry maize to sell in Badagri market. But you eat some maize here in Ale. How many baskets of maize do you sell here in the village? The young man, squatting at the chief’s feet in his colorful traditional Agbada dress, looked puzzled. Then after a few seconds reflection, he asked in impeccable English: ‘You mean what proportion of our output do we retain for domestic consumption?’

At play
Shown above looking at some of the latest acquisitions of the Staff Relations Library is the new Library Committee—(L to R) C. J. Martin, Audrey Thomas, Esme Benjamin. This committee will serve for the next six months and will be happy to receive any suggestions from staff members of new books for the library.

Some of the most recent purchases include:

- Maiden Voyages by Rochelle Girson
- Go to the Widow Maker by James Jones
- Game Without Rules by Michael Gilbert
- Sons of Martha by Richard McKenna
- Night Falls On the City by Sarah Gainham
- The Bright Green Waistcoat by Pete Fry
- A Wind of Death by Gavin Black

The Staff Relations Library is pleased to announce that it has received, courtesy of the author, a copy of GOLD DRAIN. The author, Stanley Johnson, is a member of the Young Professional Program and this is his first book. Following is a review of this book taken from the International Monetary Fund Staff News of August, 1967, written by Jan Zegers.

"It's all there, in Britain's latest spy novel, the hidden microphones and the edible code messages, the languorously seductive Mata Hari and the secret British agents impersonating Soviet agents themselves masquerading as British agents. But there's more than even Ian Fleming dreamt of, there's the IMF itself playing a key role in 'Gold Drain', described in a British book review as 'the first financial spy story.'

"It took a World Bank man to put us into that kind of atmosphere. Stanley Johnson, a young Englishman, wrote the novel shortly before joining IBRD last year. It came out a few weeks ago at Heinemann's in London with a gold-lettered black cover showing a fat, balding, unclad individual, sitting on a safe and being cuddled by a darkhaired temptress. The individual, according to the story, is the Governor of the Bank of England, though we're glad to say he bears not the slightest resemblance to any recent or present incumbent.

"The story is all about the theft-by-devious-means of a ten-billion dollar IMF-drawing from the Bank of England. Stealing an IMF drawing may seem to insiders as difficult as stealing a leprechauns' left shoe, but for story purposes Mr. Johnson has materialized the drawing into a beautiful gold-embossed bond. It is kept in the Bank of England's big safe, carefully secured with a secret combination: 36-23-35, which also prove to be the vital statistics of the Governor's seductress as the story unfolds. Sir Harry Blyth, who controls the British Export Advice Bureau, the front for a British secret service agency, decides to steal the bond because his organization has been shortchanged in the new Public Estimates. By attributing the theft to Soviet agents he hopes to be able to blackmail the Government into upping the Estimates for his service. In its peregrinations the story ranges from Kabul to the Reform Club and even brings in the U.N. Secretary General. It pokes fun at nearly everything and everybody and shows enough inside knowledge to make it 'highly recommended to Treasury men on holiday,' according to its reviews."
Soon staff members will be receiving the annual announcement marking the beginning of the United Givers Fund Campaign in the Bank Group. Following this announcement many questions are raised by staff members unfamiliar with a united fund-raising effort as to the reasons for such a campaign. The answers to two of the most frequent questions—Why a combined campaign? and What kind of agencies participate in UGF?—are given below.

1. The expense of mounting a multiplicity of fund-raising drives for individual charities is the main reason why the United Givers Fund was originally established. Only 7.1% of the total contributions received by UGF is needed for year-round administration. The cost is so low because nearly 50,000 volunteers give their time, talent and energy to the UGF campaign.

2. The United Givers Fund is composed of health, welfare or recreation agencies. An agency must satisfy four requirements to be considered for UGF financial support.

   (a) The agency must perform a needed service that does not duplicate an existing one.
   (b) It must have demonstrated broad community support.
   (c) It must have a responsible board of directors serving without compensation.
   (d) Agency operations must be subject to review by the Health and Welfare Council.

A combined appeal does not mean that all contributions are distributed through a central source. It is possible to designate the specific agency or agencies you would like to receive your total gift or a portion of it. These requests are strictly adhered to and great effort is made to fulfill individual wishes and acknowledgments are sent in answer to all requests. Each staff member will receive a list of the 153 participating agencies at the beginning of the campaign.

Last year the Bank Group contributed over $30,000 and it is hoped that we can play an even greater part this year in this worthwhile endeavor.

Why are there other charity drives? Many agencies give valuable community services not within the areas of health, welfare or recreation as defined by the Health and Welfare Council, the voluntary agency which budgets UGF funds. Some organizations eligible to join UGF prefer to raise funds independently. Other worthwhile organizations fail to meet one or more of the requirements for admission.
