Women in Haryana record mixed progress. On a positive note, maternal mortality is low and improving. Although fewer adult women have secondary education compared to adult men, the young are seeing a narrower gap in schooling. On the other hand, the state has the worst child sex ratio in the country. And, female labor force participation has declined dramatically, especially after 2005. As a result, few women work in Haryana today. When urban women work, they tend to have salaried jobs, while rural women work mostly on the farm.
